

Equinox Gets Back to Business Today

June 1, 2010

Equinox's atrium

Photo: courtesy of the restaurant.

Back with a lighter, brighter, elegantly modern look, Equinox, the top-flight New American just steps from the White House, reopens today, some five months after a pre-Christmas kitchen fire. New innovations on chef-owner Todd Gray's menu include shareable versions of his most popular dishes as starters, plus über-seasonal sides to accompany a roster of grilled or roasted meats and fish, while the decor has been redone with soft pendant lights, textured tile walls and etched glass dividers. The wine room, popular for intimate private dinners, is now encased in art glass, and the new bar sports two beer taps.